Telling our stories

Pulitzer Prize winner Connie Schultz encourages JSU students to write about their personal experiences

EMILY HAYES
NEWS EDITOR

"Each of us are our stories," according to Pulitzer Prize winning columnist Connie Schultz. When she first began writing her column nearly a decade ago, her editor gave her this advice.

"He said, 'You've got to mix it up. You've got to write personal columns, too. Because even if they hate your position on reproductive rights, they're going to love how you are as a single mom to your kids.'"

Schultz said it was the "best advice, single piece of advice I ever got in column writing. You want to close the distance."

And it seems she has.

While waiting in the airport last Wednesday, sipping a cup of coffee and writing a column, a man approached Schultz and addressed her recent appearance on "The Rachel Maddow Show," where she spoke about Rush Limbaugh.

"I hate what you said on Rachel Maddow. I hate all your opinions," he said.

"I love the dog, though. Franklin, right?"

The man was referring to the newest addition to Schultz' and her husband, U.S. Sen. Sherrod Brown's, family. Franklin is a rescue dog they adopted following the death of their 14-year-old pug Gracie. Schultz has written about the dog in several columns.

Said Schultz, "If you can write about your relationship with your dog, people are going to be a lot more patient with you when you want to talk about why Rush Limbaugh can't get away with something he said."

After all, each of us are our stories.

A product of two working-class parents, Schultz described her mother as a feisty four-foot-eleven-inch lady with a beehive hairdo and a love of playing softball. Her father worked for 36 years at a job he hated, once telling Schultz, "They could teach a monkey to do my job."

Her mother raised Schultz and her two sisters with the philosophy, "Don't marry him until you see how he treats the waitress."

"Because of course what she meant was," said Schultz, "how we treat people we're allowed to mistreat is the measure of who we are, particularly when no one's watching."

Schultz keeps her father's Hard Hat and lunch pail and her mother's hospice badge in her office. They serve as daily reminders of how hard they worked to give her and her siblings a better life.

And so she refuses to answer to the name "Sherrod Brown's wife" or "Nut-job columnist."

Her philosophy comes from African-American poet Lucille Clifton. "What they call you is one thing. What you answer to is something else."

According to Schultz, "What I answer to, first and foremost, always, is, 'I'm Chuck and Janey's kid.'"

Q & A with Schultz

KARA COLEMAN
A&E EDITOR

"What was the biggest challenge you've ever faced during your career?" "Which story has touched you most over the years?" "What are some of the things you did to prepare while you were in school?" These were just some of the questions that students in the Communication department asked of Connie Schultz, guest speaker for the Ayers Lecture last Thursday.

That morning, Schultz had a question-and-answer session with students and teachers, to give them a chance to speak with her before she delivered her lecture to the general public.

"As a writer, have you ever had to write a story that you were just totally against, but you had to push it because it was news?" asked Zandra Hall.

"You get sent on some stories that you don't necessarily think are your stories," Schultz acknowledged. "It was my job to figure out, what is the story? You can ask anyone that was my editor, and they can tell you that they would tell me to my face what they thought the story was going to be, until I got there and started reporting it."

"I'll tell you what the story is, if you give me time to get my feet on the ground and start talking to people. You gain a reputation pretty quickly if you do that, if you do it conscientiously and you do it well. They come to trust your instincts."

Because Schultz is a columnist whose job is to express her opinions, she is often faced with criticism. When asked about dealing with that issue, she shared a story.

"I can't tell you how many people I talked to yesterday at the airport alone, because I was stuck there for eight and a half hours," she said. "This one guy walks up to me and says, 'I hate your writing. I just hate your opinions.'"

"I just looked at him and he said, 'But I like your dog. Franklin, right?' Because I also write for Parade and I had written a piece about our puppy."

Schultz stated that one thing she likes about writing is being able to show people that they have more in common with one another than they had thought.

During the Q & A forum, that lasted roughly one hour, Schultz was asked by Jason McClure, "Being married to a U.S. Senator [Sherrod Brown], how hard is it for you to separate your work from your personal life? How many times have you wanted to pick up a pen and go after the people attacking your husband?" With a laugh she replied, "Oh, I don't worry about my husband. He can take care of himself."

Schultz was also asked what she did while in college to prepare her for her career. "It was all paper, all the time. Once I started working at the Daily Kent Stater, the bug bit. I never wanted to do anything else."

She went on to say, "When I went to Kent State, it was 1975, five years after they had killed four students on campus. So every year on May 4th, on the anniversary, we were swarmed with national media. We had a big controversy during my tenure there, when they wanted to build a gym that would be partially on the site where one of the students had been killed. I ended up being a stringer for The New York Times while I was there, because it was such a hotbed of activity."

Zach Tyler took the final question of the session. He raised his hand and said, "So, how is Franklin?"

The new addition to Stephenson Hall officially opens Wednesday, February 29th, and doesn't go unnoticed

EMILY GLASER
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

According to the Assistant Director of Recreational Sports, Eric Brasher, over 100 people went into Stephenson on that first Saturday and Sunday following the opening. That's more than double the normal weekend crowd of around 40 to 50 visitors per day. And the numbers have remained high.

Student workers Meredith Conduff and Katie Herin work at the sign-in desk, and have really noticed the larger numbers coming in. They said that some nights are crazy because of all the people coming through.

"I try to come in here everyday for at least an hour after class," said Senior Towanda Kirksey-Stan. "I'm glad there are dumbbell weights in here and that there's so much more room. I wish I lived in Jacksonville so I could be here even more."

Top of the line strength training equipment from Hammer Strength and Life Fitness fill the new 4,500 square foot room.

In addition, Stephenson Hall has a cardio room with treadmills, ellipticals, stair climbers and stationary bikes. There is also a Cybex machine weight room, for those who would rather not lift free weights.

For those interested, group fitness classes are offered four days a week and are open and free to students.

Step aerobics is offered Monday through Thursday at 4:45 p.m. and cardio kickboxing is held Monday and Wednesday evenings at 6:15.

Brasher said classes are always more popular in the spring because many students are trying to get in shape for spring break. Most group fitness classes this semester have seen between 25 and 30 participants.

If everything goes as planned, the HPE department hopes to have multiple weight training classes beginning this fall. Just last week, the HPE Beginning Weight Training class moved from the weight room in the Coliseum to the new addition.

Also in the works for Stephenson are televisions in the workout areas. In the past, the cardio room contained two above the treadmills, but they have yet to be installed since the move.

"We are working on putting them back up," Brasher said.

Music may be in the future in the new free weight room, as well. They are considering it, according to Brasher, but it's just new and loud and they will see where it goes.

Brasher also said that Stephenson will be looking for more student workers for the 2012 fall semester work study program.

Construction first began on Stephenson's new addition in April 2011. Brasher thanks Dr. Meehan, Dr. Hammett and David Thompson of the Physical Plant for getting the project finished in less than a year.

CASUAL CONVERSATION. TRENDY TOPICS

Romney's woman problem

CONNIE SCHULTZ
CREATORS.COM

On the evening of Super Tuesday, a radiant Ann Romney stepped up to the microphone at a Boston rally and took her best shot at changing the subject.

"Do you know what women care about?" she said. "Women care about jobs. Women care about the economy. They care about their children, and they care about the debt."

Translation: Please, please, please stop asking my husband about Rush Limbaugh.

I hear you, sister.

As all of the country knows, Limbaugh called 30-year-old law student Sandra Fluke a "slut" and a "prostitute" and asked her to post online video of her sex life. Mitt Romney's response — "it's not the language I would have used" — didn't exactly close the distance between him and the millions of mothers whose hair was on fire.

We wanted fatherly outrage. He gave us a CEO's shrug.

I still am trying to figure out what exactly Republican presidential candidates think they're going to lose if they criticize Limbaugh for publicly trash talking a woman young enough to be their daughter. What part of their base are they afraid to alienate? Or claim, even?

Now, it could be I'm just spoiled — being from Ohio and all.

Here in Cleveland, Dan Gilbert

— the majority owner of the Cleveland Cavaliers and the founder and chairman of Quicken Loans — was one of the first to drop his advertising on Limbaugh's show after the pundit's vile. Yes, it's fair to ask what took him so long, but I always have told my kids you can't ask someone to change and then not give him the chance to do it. Living the lecture here.

Secondly, I grew up with a dad who liked to sit on the front porch with a baseball bat on his lap whenever a boy showed up to date one of his daughters. He never used it. Then again, he never had to. He laid the ground rules early. It used to drive me crazy, of course, to have every boy be so afraid of my dad. Still, I did feel that special brand of ain't-I-special teenage confidence born of fatherly love and boyfriend paranoia.

In retrospect, a blissful time.

Anyway.

Back to Ann Romney. She's right, of course. Women do care about the economy. And children. And debt. And it's nice to hear at least one Republican acknowledge that.

However, we women are complicated creatures, capable of holding any number of thoughts in our heads. At the same time, too. Nothing but trouble for the

FACEBOOK.COM

Romneys of the world.

We're also good at connecting the dots. I'll go so far as to say we're annoyingly good at it, which is why our concern for the economy (dot) fuels our demand for affordable health care (dot) that includes low-cost contraception (dot), which is way cheaper than a full-term pregnancy (dot), not to mention what it costs to raise a child to 18 years of age (dot).

Dot. Dot. Dot. Dot. Dot.

Oh, and the majority of us believe abortion should remain legal (dot) because we trust women (dot) to make their own decisions (dot) about their bodies (dot).

Dot. Dot. Dot. Dot.

We're on fire, I swear.

And I'm just talking about the women in Ohio, where we've had it up to here with the state Legislature's attempts to reclassify us as branded cattle. I appreciate Mrs. Romney's attempt to focus on jobs, but we already heard that campaign promise in 2010. Two months later, we had pregnant women exposing their bellies for ultrasound "testimony" in the Republican-controlled state House.

They're all yours, Mitt Romney. Welcome to the circus.

One more thing you should know before you come back to Ohio. We're big on dogs here, and I'm afraid we know all about poor roof-strappin' Seamus.

I think you know where I'm going with this. I'm not going to harp. I leave that to New York Times columnist Gail Collins, a fellow native Ohioan.

She's done our state proud, with her Midwestern connect-the-dots stick-to-it-ness.

There I go again, braggin' about our women.

EMILY HAYES
NEWS EDITOR

We've obviously devoted a great deal of this issue to last week's Ayers Lecture and its speaker, Connie Schultz. But for good reason. The woman was fabulous.

I listened to her lecture twice this weekend as if it were an audiobook, and the point that most struck a chord with me was this: We all have something in common.

As someone who's been blogging for the past several years, I've always tiptoed around all things political and religious. Facebook is another story, but with my blog I've built a decent readership. Quite simply, I don't want to lose that.

It never occurred to me that people might stick with me because they like my posts about my fear of turning 30, being left on the side of the road while waiting in line at Bonnaroo, and working through the grief over the loss of my 12-year-old cousin. If they like these personal stories, they probably won't mind the occasional rant.

The point being, when I hold back beliefs simply to keep readers, I'm not giving my full self. And how many of us do that on a daily basis?

You and I have something in common. You may not agree with me that Rick Santorum's a lunatic, but I bet you know the feeling of losing someone you love.

We may not agree on the interpretation of Leviticus, but we might agree that a Mac is better than a PC. You may hate sushi and edamame, but can't wait — seriously can't wait — for Spring Break.

So thank you, Mrs. Schultz. Thank you for pushing me to express myself completely. We should all be free to express ourselves — all of ourselves. But most importantly, thanks for reminding me that I have something in common with everyone. Even those who love Rick Santorum.

ARTS AND ENTERTAINMENT

Ben Nunnally/THE CHANTICLEER

“One man’s pursuit of greatness”

BEN NUNNALLY
STAFF WRITER

James Green arrived Thursday at the Gadsden State Community College library in a car, but he brought along planes, trains, and other automobiles for the ride. Well, paintings of them, anyway.

The college featured Green’s works in a special event they called “One Man’s Pursuit of Excellence: A Solo Exhibition of the Art of James Green.” The exhibit featured several of Green’s works, each one bright and colorful, to invoke a sense of nostalgia for an optimistic time in American history, when having lived through the ordeal of World War II wasn’t such a rare trait.

“Why do something that isn’t going to be uplifting?” asked Green. His centerpiece for the exhibit, Widge, is an oil and acrylic painting that shows Ian “Widge” Glead smiling from the cockpit of his Hawker Hurricane World War II fighter jet. Rather than depict Widge in the middle of a dogfight, Green has him on his way home, safe for another day.

Green’s art is often informed by his own experience in the military; when Green points out the cordite stains around the firing ports of Widge’s aircraft, it’s because he knows how it should look from experience. He joined the military in 1977, only days after graduating high school.

“I graduated from Lee High on May 30th, and on June 1st I reported for duty down at the Military Entrance Processing Station in Montgomery,” Green said. His career in the Army lasted 22 years, taking him into the first Gulf War and then to Washington State, where he eventually retired before returning to Alabama.

His love of aviation goes back much further, to his childhood. “I got interested in entertaining myself after school building model airplanes,” he said, recalling that model kits cost only 75 cents at the time. Printed on the assembly instructions in each kit would be a brief history for the type of plane being modeled. Green read those mini-biographies and ended up in the library, hunting for more facts about his planes.

“Then I’d sit in class in elementary school and junior high drawing pictures in the back of my notebooks of airplanes. And cars. And trains. And all that other neat stuff,” he said.

Mario Gallardo, an art professor at Gadsden State, said “as an illustrator, [Green] does some great work.” Gallardo had several selections to choose from, and tried to create a theme through Green’s work. He chose a patriotic mix of war planes, eagles and scenes of Fort Payne, where Green lives and keeps his studio, a converted garage he remodeled himself.

Gadsden State students in attendance had a chance to speak with Green about his art. Former Marine and current art major James West found Green’s work to be inspiring, especially his attention to detail.

“There are veterans out there who will say he really did his homework, this is really what it looks like,” West said. “I really respect him because he’s a veteran, too.”

J.E.T. rocks Jacksonville

MEGAN GARGIS
STAFF WRITER

Jacksonville State University has an up and coming music scene, with one of those bands being Jean Ellison and the Treatment(J.E.T.). The trio is made up of Jean Ellison on vocals, Steven Ellison on percussion and Aron Thompson on keyboard and bass. They refer to their sound as a mixture of jazz and pop. “Something people can dance to, it’s a different sound than anything around here,” stated Steven Ellison.

The band has been performing together for a year. They started at a JSU financial convention at Little River Canyon after the jazz band that Steven and Aron were part of broke up.

The band brings a new level of music to JSU. “Not only do we enjoy music, it’s our career, our passion and our job,” says Jean Ellison. “It reflects in our music.”

Jean has a bachelor’s degree in music education with an emphasis in voice, and she’s currently finishing her master’s degree in music. Steven has a bachelor’s degree in music education with an emphasis in percussion and a masters in music. Aron is a music major with an emphasis in jazz studies.

The music has a different feel than most things on the radio these days. According to Thompson, “When the music comes together, it all comes from different backgrounds. It’s new music.”

On Thursday nights, they host open house rehearsals. “So they [the audience] can hear what we’re working on. You know, jam out and have a good time,” explained Jean.

The band hasn’t played many shows in Jacksonville, but fans may have seen them opening for Th’ Burning. The band plays in places like Murphy, North Carolina, Knoxville, Tennessee, and Gadsden, Alabama. They opened for Nappy Roots in Murphy, North Carolina. They do plan on playing more shows in the Jacksonville area.

“We’re making music as a treatment. It’s music for your soul,” stated Jean.

Jax Opera presents Romeo et Juliette

COURTNEY RAY
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

The Jacksonville Opera Theater is in the final stages of preparing for its upcoming performances of Charles Gounod’s Romeo et Juliette.

The production, sung completely in French, is an opera in five acts based on Shakespeare’s The Tragedy of Romeo and Juliet.

For many of the cast members, much of the preparation for their roles has been in perfecting diction.

“There’s a lot of language work, and when you’re doing French especially,” said Eric Wilcox, who is playing Romeo. “In French, there are a lot of sounds that don’t exist in English, so it’s kind of a culmination of the training I’ve had here and outside sources, too. This role is really heavy, and it’s hard. It’s easy for me now, but it would have been impossible for me a year ago.”

Eric Wilcox is a senior and music major at JSU.

Kaylon Gilley, a senior and Music Education major at JSU is playing the role of Tybalt, Juliet’s cousin and enemy of Romeo.

Gilley says that balancing the time with learning the opera, school, and work has been a challenge for everyone.

“I have reason to believe, though, that this will be the best production that JOT has ever produced,” said Gilley. “Even though we have so much to do in such a little time, we have students in this show who have the energy and willingness to learn and put this show together. I have a lot of faith in them and the production staff, as well as all the ones who are contributing so much to putting this together.”

As fate would have it, the role of Juliette is played by Estefania Wilcox, the real-life wife of her onstage Romeo.

Estefania Wilcox graduated with a B.A. in Voice from JSU in spring 2010, began her graduate work in the spring of 2011 and is taking a break this semester.

“My favorite part about doing this show is probably getting to sing absolutely beautiful music and getting to sing it with my husband!” said Estefania Wilcox. “This music is very moving. There are many instances when I can just listen and get teary-eyed.”

Eric Wilcox knows that an opera might be a tough sell, but encourages people to “keep an open mind.” “You’ll enjoy it,” added Wilcox. “The story is moving, it’s warm, and it’s gorgeous.”

This is a collaborative effort between the Jacksonville Opera Theatre, the Etowah Youth Orchestra of Gadsden, Ars Nova School of the Arts in Huntsville, and the Downtown Dance Conservatory in Gadsden, and is the biggest show that JOT has brought to life.

Performances will be at 7:00 pm, March 23rd and 24th at Wallace Hall on the campus of Gadsden State Community College in Gadsden.

Ticket prices range from $12-$20, and they may be purchased online at wallacehall.org or by calling the Wallace Hall Ticket Center at 256-543-2787.

The show is directed by Dr. Nathan Wight.

So come out and support this amazingly talented cast and production crew. You won’t be disappointed.

Chili contest heats up Martin Hall

ALEX LANG
STAFF WRITER

The aroma of chili filled Martin Hall last Wednesday as contestants competed in the 6th Annual Martin Hall Chili Cook-Off.

For a $5 donation, people were allowed to sample all 14 contestants’ chili recipes and vote for their favorite. They voted by ranking their top five choices on a ballot slip and circling their favorite one.

Drinks were also provided and a dessert was available for an additional cost. Anyone was allowed to enter the contest.

The cook-off brought students, faculty and the general public. All proceeds went to the Calhoun County American Cancer Society Relay for Life.

Relay for Life was formed with the sole purpose of raising money to help find a cure for a disease that has taken the lives of millions.

“We used to donate our proceeds to the American Heart Association,” said Karen Gregg, faculty member and event coordinator. “But with the growing number of people affected by cancer in our community, we decided to donate to the American Cancer Society this year.”

Gregg loves being a part of the event every year because she is one of many who have been affected by cancer.

“I am a cancer survivor,” said Gregg. “We all just love to have fun in Martin Hall and what better way to have fun than to do something that will help save lives.”

Awards were given to the top three contestants immediately following the cookoff, as well as an award to a contestant whose name was randomly drawn from a hat.

First place went to Dr. Joe Morgan, assistant professor of geography, who found it exciting to have the best-tasting chili.

“I tried each and every contestant’s chili and they were all great,” said Morgan. “This is my third time to compete here and it feels good to finally go home a winner.”

Second place went to Tracy Casey, a department assistant who also helps lead the event.

When asked if she was disappointed she had not won, Casey said, “Absolutely not. It was never really about winning, just helping those in need.”

Graduate student Courtney Wesker took third place, while Jonathan Herbert, assistant professor of geography, was the lucky drawing winner.

Hand-made ceramic bowls, created by professor of ceramics Steve Loucks, were given to the winners.

Students passing through were more than happy to help the cause, while also getting a tasty lunch.

The Gamecocks had their hands full with Georgia State in a softball doubleheader this past Thursday. The Panthers of Georgia State entered the day having won nine out of their last 10 games, that included wins over OVC opponents Morehead State and Tennessee Tech. In the first game, 2011 OVC Freshman of the Year Tiffany Harbin started her second game of the season. She had been sidelined for the first part of the season with a hand injury.

Harbin struck out four in four innings, however allowed four runs off of six hits. The Gamecocks could only get four hits total in game one and Junior Jessica Guy was responsible for half of those after her 2-3 game. Harbin was charged with her first loss of the season as the Panthers continued their win streak in a 2-4 victory over JSU. The night game was just as exciting. Hilary Phillips out of Ider, AL, made her return to the pitching circle after also sitting for a few weeks with an arm injury. Phillips fell behind early giving the Panthers a 3-0 lead after one inning. The Gamecocks would fight back and put two on the board in the second and would tie the game at three in the third off of Freshman Shelby Holley’s RBI single. In the sixth the Panthers would strike again for two runs and hold the lead for a 5-3 victory in the night game. The Panthers improved to a five game win streak and winners of 11 of their last 12. The Gamecocks would begin preparing for the start of OVC action.

Harbin earns OVC Pitcher of the Week Honor

BRENTWOOD, Tenn. – Sophomore Tiffany Harbin made her return to the Jacksonville State softball team count last week and earned Ohio Valley Conference Pitcher of the Week honors, the league office announced on Monday. After missing the first four weeks of the season with an injury to her pitching hand, the Hazel Green, Ala., native eased her way back into the rotation during the week. By the weekend, she guided the Gamecocks to a sweep of Eastern Illinois to open OVC play. She started the week with a two-inning outing in a 6-5 win at UAB and then tossed the first four innings of a Thursday doubleheader against Georgia State. Once the 2011 OVC Freshman of the Year got to the weekend, she was ready to lead JSU to a three-game sweep of the defending OVC regular season champions. Harbin started the first game on Saturday and went the distance, limiting the Panthers to one earned run while striking out 13 batters. She capped the series with a four-hit shutout of EIU on Sunday that saw her strike out seven batters. Over the two starts, she posted a 2-0 record and a 0.50 earned run average to go with her 20 strikeouts.

The Gamecocks tacked on insurance runs for the remainder of the game. In the bottom of the fifth, Tyris Branford scored on a wild pitch and Kristin Graham scored on a single by Jessica Guy. Shelby Holley snapped her home run drought. She had not hit a homer since March 2 vs. UNC Greensboro. “The thing about Shelby,” said Head Coach Jana McGinnis, “she’s not getting pitched to very much either.” “I was real proud of the way our girls played. The only negative thing I can really point out is the runners left on base.” JSU left 10 runners on base in game one and seven in game two. “One positive is we’re getting them there. Earlier in the year we weren’t getting them there.”
